

I'm going to write about English school in Malta. I studied English with a Turk, a Colombian, a Libyan and a Chinese person. I said that all my clothes were made in China. Then, the Turk said that he had Chinese electric appliances but these broke soon. I thought that he spoke bluntly.

The Libyan's eyes were big. But he didn't laugh when everyone else laughed. I said to him that I feel that Libya has a scary image. He said it is scary too. We can speak with varieties of foreign people in foreign English school. Our teacher's name was Marie. It sounds like Japanese. (My mother's name is Masae.) She asked me if it is true that when we have earthquakes, everything shakes. There aren't any earthquakes in Malta. (Malta had an earthquake 700 years ago.) I studied three days here, only in the morning. The other students made a strong impression on me.

↙ This is the school.
